Nursing Scholarship Essay

A career in nursing is not one that can be taken lightly. Nursing professionals must endure long hours, stressful situations, as well as make key decisions which can mean the health and overall wellbeing of another human being. A career in nursing, despite the difficulties associated with the profession, can also be an extremely rewarding and fulfilling career. Having studied the outlook, prospects, and opportunities that a career in nursing can provide me, I have set my sights on obtaining the education, skills, and experience necessary in order to fulfill my role as a future nursing professional.

The benefits of a college education in general are vast, and I know that pursuing a college degree can greatly assist me in succeeding in my professional aspirations. For one, a college education can promote independence, as college students are required to make the initiative to attend class regularly, take notes, and study in order to maintain decent grades and learn all they can to prepare them for a future career. A college education can also greatly aid in intellectual development. As somebody who has always been intellectually curious, I see college as an opportunity to fuel my curiosity and learn more about a variety of subjects, both within and outside of nursing coursework. Attending college has benefits outside of academic and personal development. A college education can also assist an individual in developing or expanding their social circle. Having a large social circle is essential for an individual's personal happiness as well as future career and networking opportunities. Being surrounded with like-minded students who are working hard to obtain their educational and professional goals will greatly improve my personal as well as professional life. Additionally, a college education will greatly assist in my personal growth and self-development. College provides an opportunity for young adults to further develop their interests and take on a new level of self-awareness and identity. As I continue to develop my mind through my college education, I also help to continue to develop myself so that I may one day help others to do the same.

While my dream now is to become a nurse, this was not always the case. For my entire life, I have been very interested in art, particularly fine art. Over the past twelve years, I have been learning to draw and paint under the mentorship of a local artist who greatly inspired my passion for art and the skills that I possess today. Over the course of my training, I have taken a keen interest in painting with oil as a medium. While I largely painted out of my own interest and of subjects that I found to be inspiring, I was also able to commission paintings for others, including portraits of family friends. While I was in high school, I was also commissioned by a local kindergarten to draw cartoon figures on the walls of the school. At the young age of sixteen, this was a tremendous honor and led me to initially pursue a career in art. I had the natural talent as well as the interest for a career in art; however, something was certainly missing as I began to pursue a career in art.

Once I was of age, I began to pursue a career related to my passion for art. I attended architecture school for approximately half a year. While I initially enjoyed this path, I found it to be a very difficult career field filled with many people who had a stronger background than I. I could foresee tremendous difficulties in this career field and was unsure of my future in the field of architecture early on. As such, I left school in pursuit of new opportunities, while maintaining my interest in art as a hobby that I to this day practice avidly.

In place of an education surrounding a career in art, I have decided to pursue an education which will lead to a career in nursing. Nursing was a career path that did not initially occur to me, but it is now obvious that a career in nursing is ideally suited to my personality, interests, as well as abilities. Many of the skills I had developed in practicing art could easily be applied to a career in nursing. For example, art takes a great deal of discipline and time dedication. It also takes significant nursing, critical thinking, as well as a steady hand. All of these skills are essential in any healthcare profession, including nursing.

Looking back at my life, I now understand that from even a young age, I had the mindset to become a nurse. Nurses must be highly energetic as they endure long hours and a significant amount of physical activity and fatigue is highly possible in this career. I have always been the type of person to constantly push myself even though I may be tired and feel overwhelmed. At the end of the day, I know that it will all be worth it to know that I have helped a patient in obtaining a high level of health and wellness. Nurses must also be able to react to ever-changing situations in a rational and intelligent manner. I am very skilled in this respect and am able to make key decisions under pressure.

Nurses must be diligent, but they must also have a genuine desire to help those around them. I find that nursing will be the most rewarding career path for me for this reason. I have a strong desire to help those around me, even in ways that may seem minor or trivial to others. I believe that giving back to your community and leaving the world a better place is our individual as well as collective responsibility. If I can brighten somebody's day, assist them in any way possible, I consider myself to be successful. As a nurse, I would have the opportunity to help those around me every single day. I see great potential for personal and career satisfaction in this profession.

I am confident that my skills, experience, and motivational drive have prepared me to pursue an education which will lead me to a career in nursing. In order to pursue my dreams of becoming a nurse, an education is an essential first step. I am ready and able to begin this process and excited to take the next steps.
